Conference Call

The conference "Lifelong learning - individual, particular and universal contexts" is a reaction to the ongoing social transformations, limitations and opportunities resulting from the ubiquitous globalization, technological progress and epidemic conditions that affect the everyday life and education. Along with the observed changes, more and more often some questions arise about universal educational values, about the importance of educational traditions of a country or region, for national minorities or immigrants, but also about the individual people's needs. Therefore, it seems extremely important to undertake a scientific discussion, on the one hand about unification and striving for universality, and on the other - about the opposite of universalism, e.g. particularism and individualism in education. In this new situation for all of us, it is also necessary to reflect on remote, lifelong learning in conditions of various limitations.

Universal values, the implementation of which is postulated by all countries worldwide, are maintaining peace and taking care of the natural environment, developing the culture of dialogue and tolerance, shaping pro-ecological attitudes, cultivating the values of humanism, respecting human rights as well as counteracting nationalism, racism and totalitarianism. It is also important to acknowledge patriotic education, regionalism, religious or cultural diversity, independent education, and individual educational needs. The three concepts mentioned in the title of the conference that seem different in their meaning - universalism, particularism and individualism - are not mutually exclusive, but complement and enrich each other, provided their reasonable understanding, interpretation and implementation.

The conference aims at exchanging the knowledge and experience of scientists from various European countries and discussing the readiness of a person for lifelong learning, taking into account individual, local, regional, national and universal contexts.
